CASS STREET IN THE 1920'S

LOOKING DOWN CASS STREET, from around Missouri, in the 1920's. This Guy Sensor shot shows Cass Street when it was still designated as Highway 1, the most popular route to Los Angeles for most San Diegans. In the distance can be seen the "Pacific Beach -- Come Again" sign that spanned Cass at Felspar. (All photos courtesy of San Diego Historical Society/Title Insurance Collection.

(Above) Never published before, this two-plate panoramic shot shows the original Dunaway Drugstore, at the southwest corner of Cass and Garnet, probably in 1925. A sign for Favel's Meat Market is visible on the Garnet side of the buidling. Notice the absence of Crystal Pier at the foot of Garnet. (Below) Similar to the photo above, this shot was taken after Dunaway moved to its present location, and Crystal Pier was open for business.
